Dr. Lewis Named Recipient of the Harvard Medical School Faculty Fellowship

William Lewis, MD, has been named a recipient of the 2026-2028 Harvard Medical School Faculty Fellowship, administered by the Office for Culture and Community Engagement.

The Fellowship is a two-year, non-degree Faculty Fellowship program designed to address faculty needs for additional support to conduct a mentored research project, including clinical and/or translational research, and to provide release time from responsibilities at a key point in their career development. Fellows are provided opportunities to participate in OCCE-sponsored faculty development activities that enhance their leadership skills and visibility, and present at the 2028 Annual Health Policy Meeting.

During this program, Dr. Lewis will be conducting a prospective clinical study using an image processing tool to highlight and quantify erythema and skin inflammation in patients with skin of color.
